By Carolyn Hsu

Even though we know to shop for products that are specifically tailored to our needs, when it comes to the hairbrush—possibly the most commonly used beauty tool ever—many of us still just grab the first one we see off the shelf. As it turns out, using the right hairbrush can make a big difference in the health of your hair and how effectively you can style it. And just as you wouldn't use a blush brush to apply eye shadow, hairbrushes also come in various sizes and shapes that are designed to do specific things. But with so many different options on the market, it can get a little confusing—so we asked Butterfly Studio Salon stylist Kelly Finneran to help us break it down to the “mane” points. Round Brush: For Blowouts

“Round brushes can be used for any blow dry look you're going for,” says Finneran. “They are great both for creating styles with body and bend, or when working to smooth natural texture. It's easier to control tension while styling with a round brush, which is essential to smoothing out hair or building a style that lasts.”
